Chris McIntosh loves a challenge. From his days as an all-district athlete to his time spent as a professional golfer, his competitive spirit propels him to achieve in all aspects of his life. This drive and determination are both also evident in his recruiting practice and ensure he makes strategic matches that help his candidates and clients meet their goals.

Chris came to Lucas Group in 2017 in the Human Resources practice group. Working with high-level HR talent and leading employers, he focuses on searches in Washington, DC; Maryland; Virginia and Delaware. Understanding and appreciating that no two jobs or individuals are alike, he strives to make recommendations that are built not only on skill sets and experience, but also personality and cultural fit.

Chris began his career in the golf industry, where, for seven years, he held many titles including professional golfer, membership and event director, tournament director and high school varsity golf coach. He worked in membership for six years before moving into membership at the American Staffing Association. Throughout his career, he met and exceeded sales and retention goals for four straight years. His experience in sales and membership along with his persistent yet humorous demeanor is a winning combination that allows him to succeed in his executive recruiting career.

Chris spends his free time volunteering as a Chair for the Pancreatic Cancer Action Network and has been in the top three in fundraising for five consecutive years. He is also an experienced calligrapher, hand letterer and logo designer.
